

I used the free trial of Email on Acid to test both the interactivity and overall rendering of my email. I ran into some challenges while navigating the website, as I wasn't fully familiar with its interface. I uploaded my email using both the GitHub link and by copy/pasting the HTML code. During testing, I noticed that the images in my email did not load. This may have been due to the testing platform not having access to the hosted image files. Additionally, I was unable to interact with the email elements; the platform only provided static screenshots of how the email appeared across different devices and email clients. Overall, the layout of the email remained fairly consistent across the tested environments. The main exception was Outlook on desktop, where I observed some formatting issues that could affect the visual presentation.

We're Watching You...

Yes, that's right. We saw you skip today. Again. Are you trying to make your streak disappear? Other people are climbing the leaderboard while you're busy scrolling cat videos. How does that feel? Languages don't learn themselves. Your Doublings owl is judging you. Don't make it frown.

Come on. Be above average. Or at least try. Seriously. Your streak is judging you right now.

Pick Up That Streak

Your friends are already ahead. Don't be last.
